Anxiety and uncertainty cloud the NGO world

GEETANJALI KRISHNA

New Delhi, 29 September

n late July, when the Supreme Court of India initiated contempt proceedings against lawyer Prashant Bhushan, civil society activists worried that freedom of speech was under threat. Later, when the same civil society members were named by the police as instigators of the riots that rocked northeast Delhi in February this year, the threat loomed larger. And today Amnesty International India announced it could no longer afford to uphold human rights in India due to reprisals from the Indian government.

organisations Non-governmental (NGOs) say that demands for accountability and transparency in public works and the imperatives of enforcing human rights in India are becoming challenging. These high-profile clampdowns, they add, have not only successfully stopped the activists in their tracks, but they've had smaller NGOs facing an existential crisis.

"In the last few months, the reprisals against noted activists and large NGOs have made me cautious about speaking and civil society in three ways. "First, they

my mind on social media," says Veena Lal, director of Karm Marg, a children's home in Faridabad. "It could adversely impact the 60 children dependent on me.'

Reprisals, smaller NGOs reveal, take many forms. "Income tax scrutiny is a commonly used tool to punish people like us," says the founder of a Delhi-based NGO on the condition of confidentiality. "We're so that the nuisance value of the many trips to the chartered accountant and to the income tax office is huge."

NGOs have also expressed concerns over the provisions of the Foreign Contribution (Regulation) Amendment (FCRA) Bill 2020, which the Rajya Sabha recently passed. These, they say, will further clip the wings of the beleaguered civil society. Many small NGOs, which didn't have FCRA, used to rely on foreign platforms like Global Giving to receive foreign funds. They allege that now the government is not allowing even these platforms to disburse funds.

"I sense a lot of fear and uncertainty around," says Apar Gupta of Delhi-based Internet Freedom Foundation, which advocates digital rights and liberties. "It is especially discouraging for young people in the development sector. I've noticed that many of them are actively considering other career options to escape this atmosphere."

Anjali Bhardwaj of Satark Nagrik Sangathan, who has been named along with two junior colleagues in the charge sheet on the Delhi riots, says such institutionalised witch hunts muzzle free speech discourage individual NGOs have expressed activists from standing up for what they believe in. Second, NGOs targeted end up becoming incapacitated. And third, by making very public examples of organisations like Amnesty, the government is sending a chilling message that these are the consequences of dissent.'

Amnesty is among a list small and short-handed at the best of times of high-profile civil society organisations such as Indira Jaising's Lawyers Collective, Bhushan's Campaign for Judicial Accountability and Judicial Reforms and Harsh Mander's Centre for Equity Studies that have been under intense scrutiny.

The day Amnesty published its report on the riots in northeast Delhi, alleging the role of the state, one of its bank accounts was frozen. Weeks earlier, its members were called in for interrogation on the same day they brought out a report on human rights violations in Kashmir.

"The civil society space is rapidly shrinking as a result of this," says Bhardwaj. "While some of us have lawyer friends working pro bono for us, the legal fees alone brought upon by such reprisals

THERE ARE 49.860 FCRA ASSOCIATIONS IN INDIA, of which 22,447 were active as of September 29, 2020. While more than 9,000 of these were registered in the last 10 years, new FCRA registrations were down from 1,961 in 2011 to 164 in 2020 - the lowest in 10 years. And more than 20,000 have been cancelled.

A senior FCRA expert said that the government is using a very big hammer to squash a relatively small problem. "It is a mutually destructive approach. The latest Bill will further flip the world of NGOs upside down." RUCHIKA CHITRAVANSHI is a potent enough threat."

Amnesty plans to move a writ petition in Karnataka High Court against the freezing of its bank accounts. Sources in the organisation say its executive director, Avinash Kumar, is paying from his pocket to keep the offices running for the next few weeks and fight the legal battles ahead. Today, as Amnesty employees report for their last day at work, civil society members say they can only wait and see for whom the bell tolls next few years ago, Biswajit Borkataky was riding back to Gurugram from A was rightly back to Guille.

For Harley lovers, the ride wasn't always smooth

DHRUV MUNJAL New Delhi, 29 September

Jaipur when he stopped at a highway dhaba. He parked his gleaming Harley-Davidson Super Glide Custom by the roadside and ordered a cup of tea. Harley owners are used to getting ogled at by fellow motorists, but even a seasoned rider like Borkataky was mildly thrown off by the peculiar request that followed.

"A man came up to me and said there was a wedding in his family. He wanted to rent my bike so that the groom could enter riding a Harley," remembers Borkataky, letting out a laugh. Another time, he says, a car rammed into him from behind at a traffic light because the driver was so occupied admiring his motorcycle that he forgot to brake.

On Indian roads, Harley-Davidson motorcycles are rare specimens (the company sold only some 2,500 last year), garnering attention wherever they go. Almost every Harley aficionado will have a story about how they've been stopped on the road and disarmingly asked: "Kitne ki hai (how much is it for)?" Such adulation is a huge part of the Harley-Davidson cult, one made up of immensely proud and passionate riders. And while all bike cultures are rooted in a deep sense of community, Harley's stature is pretty much unrivalled — more than a million riders worldwide are part of the official Harley Owners Group, commonly called HOG.

Now, with the company announcing plans to wind up operations in India, that pride has taken a hit. Late last week, the American bike-maker announced that it was shutting down its manufacturing plant in Bawal, Haryana, and substantially scaling back sales operations. From being exorbitantly priced to facing stiff competition, Harley was always going to find it tough to crack a market like India.

Even so, the move has come as a bit of shock for owners, who can't help but feel a sense of abandonment. There is anger. even. "In some ways, they cheated us, since these are very expensive bikes. This is a betrayal of trust," says Mumbai-based Pramoud Rao, promoter and managing director at Zicom Electronic Security Systems, who bought a Harley-Davidson Softail Heritage in 2011.

Naturally, there is anxiety over aftersales services. For instance, Noida-based ing to wait days for them to arrive. corporate professional Kartik Dhar, who Accessories are another headache, most

That is also Harley's official line, but there is fear among owners that the contracts will not part of the Delhi-based Motorhead last very long, given that the company has Motorcycle Club, says that when the club already been in India — the Bawal plant was formed seven years ago, almost every customers since the beginning. Rao points to how a trip to one of the service centres generally means that you're down by a few lakhs. "The bike is great to ride. But when it comes to maintenance, you could buy a new Hero motorcycle with the amount you end up paying for one visit.

It's scary," says Dhar, who took his Harley-Davidson SuperLow 883 to Jammu over the weekend. Dhar, 32, is among the younger Harley owners around — the bike is normally seen as the preferred choice of older men, usually in the 45 to 55 age bracket.

Dhar goes to the extent of saying that taking care of a Harley — official dealerships operate at flat rates and charge by the hour — is dearer than owning a standard Audi or Mercedes. "The people who've been loyal to the brand for long simply aren't happy with it. And that's why there is so much discontent," he feels. Often. spares are difficult to get, with owners hav-

That explains why many motorcycle enthusiasts have veered away from Harley in recent years. Borkataky, who is member rode a Harley. Now most have switched to brands The irritants such as BMW, Triumph, Honda or the Kawasaki.

Even as the Harley is known for its raw power and alluring charm, it was never really fit for Indian roads: the big engines tend to heat up during peak summer and they often make for a bumpy ride. And then many models come with a low ground clearance.

"Harley has lost a bit of that charm. Other brands are Servicing, in fact, was a sore point for now offering better tech at cheaper prices," feels Borkataky. "So if you just want to take a long trip, you opt for, say, a BMW Tourer because it makes more sense."

Owners are now hoping that talks with Hero MotoCorp will result in a collaboration and some normalcy will be restored Some of the consternation has been allayed by the fact that a number of unofficial workshops — in Delhi, the popular ones include Pathpavers and Speed Monks that know how to service these superbikes have come up in the past few years. And despite the collective anguish, Harley owners are confident that their legendary camaraderie will see them through this crisis. Dhar sums it up: "Just like golf, riding a Harley is about networking. The bond will remain strong.
